Note The New Photoshop window shown on About Getting Started: Your First Project will help you get started. It's generally not necessary to switch to a new window when you open Photoshop for the first time, but it's fine to do so if you want. You'll also want to familiarize yourself with the New menu (Shift-N) and the application menu bar. # About Getting Started: Your First Project Most people start by opening up a new document. But if you have Photoshop (CS3 or later), you can start a new document right away by clicking the icon of the type of document you want to create. That first step is relatively easy, but it's the next few steps that really help you get off to a good start. It's not unusual to save five or more new documents when you're learning Photoshop. It's best to save them in a folder, so that they don't take up tons of space on your hard drive. The New Photoshop window is a very basic window in which you can create your first document. In this window, you see a

With Photoshop Elements, you can use Adobe Camera Raw to process raw files, edit layers, apply transformations, and generate previews. Additionally, you can use Adobe Camera Raw as a filter to filter on the styles and adjustments in Photoshop Elements. This tutorial teaches you how to change the background color of a photo in Adobe Photoshop Elements. 1. Open the image you wish to edit. 2. Choose File > Open.

Navigate to and choose the image you wish to edit. Click Open. 3. Use the Rectangular Marquee tool to select the area of the image you wish to change. Make sure the content of the image is visible, by using the Zoom tool and dragging in the viewfinder. This way you can make sure the content is visible and that you don't select any outside the image. Make sure the "Selection" checkbox is selected in the "Open" window, by clicking the little box, so that the window will only open with the items you select. 4. Highlight the content you wish to change by clicking on it. This will turn the selection from grey to white. 5. With the Marquee tool, select the area of the image you wish to change, by clicking on the content and dragging it where you want it to be. 6. Select the Format and Adjustment tabs. 7. Click on the Background Color icon on the Adjustments panel. 8. A menu with a color palette appears at the bottom of the window. Choose a color from the palette that best fits with your image. 9. If you select "None" on the palette, the content of the image will remain the same. 10. If you select any color from the palette, the content of the image will be changed to the corresponding color. 11. Click on the image at the top of the window to preview the change you just applied. 12.

Click OK to apply the changes, or Cancel to discard the changes. Adobe Photoshop Elements lets you use a filter with the Adjustment tab to filter for certain adjustments made in Photoshop. In order to apply the filter, you must first check the box for selecting images from another filter in the "Open" window, found in the bottom right corner of the window. 1. Open the image you wish to edit. 2. Use the File menu to open the Adjustments panel. a681f4349e

Momentum behind pro-choice Maine lawmaker PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Democratic Rep. Diane Russell is about to embark on a national campaign tour, drumming up support for her bill that would make it easier for women to end pregnancies as they reach various ages and stages of life. Russell is a 32-year-old former law student and never-married mother of two, a surprising fact in a state that places a high priority on traditional views of parenting. Russell, a Portland Democrat from the rural Bangor area, is about to embark on a national pro-choice tour to promote her bill, “The Life and Death of a Law: Protecting Personal Responsibility in Medical Decisions,” which aims to strengthen the state’s restriction on abortions based on when in a woman’s life she decides to have the procedure, an issue already on the table in the Maine Legislature. She’ll be joined on the national tour by people she met when she was 6 years old, most of whom live far from Maine, to advocate for changing the state’s law. She’ll be the touring tour’s lone Democrat, although the group includes Republican former Rep. Marty Knutson, who has also authored a bill similar to Russell’s. “Nobody tells you that you are going to be single. That is just what you are,” said Russell, speaking by phone on Wednesday as she prepared to board a charter flight to New York. “I went through a lot of the same emotions that many people go through before they fall in love with someone. When they’re young, they think it’s just going to be like that. It doesn’t matter what age you are. You just fall in love. And you can fall in love with someone of any age.” Russell, who will be in her fifth year in the House, is traveling to New York for the tour to encourage officials there to sign off on a petition to convince Washington, D.C., to include a “Maine exceptions” amendment to the federal Health Care Freedom for Women Act, which passed Congress last year with the help of the National Rifle Association. The bill includes a 5-week, 24-hour period for women to make their own medical decisions, as well as a 10-week limit based on when a woman is pregnant.

, there is only one of you, and I love you.” Shortly after, the door opened and my parents entered the room. I looked to see if there was a difference in their faces. There wasn’t. But their voices held a new tone. “Whatever. We’re not going to be here that long.” My father sat next to me. I watched him. He wore a light green sweater that matched his eyes, but today he wasn't clean shaven. He had small stubble on his face. He smiled at me. "You're going to be okay." My mother stepped forward and then sat beside him. "I don't think we should tell him yet. He needs time to calm down. I'll tell you if it's safe to." Rand Paul:

"Obamacare architect to be grilled in Senate" Rand Paul is predicting his opposition colleagues will grill former Massachusetts governor and Obamacare architect at "his full wits," a preview of Tuesday's grilling of former president-elect Barack Obama. Speaking at an event in Louisville, Kentucky, Paul, the Republican party's likely 2016 presidential candidate, and West Virginia Sen. Joe Manchin, the top Democrat on the Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee, will talk about the three years they spent working on a bill to create the massive health care plan. The event at the University of Louisville followed an evening "town hall" for about 250 people with Manchin at Monticello High School, he says. "We will have a full, robust discussion of health care, because we are in danger," Paul said, who worked with Manchin on the bill. "I've got to say I'm a little bit thrilled as a partisan," Paul said, according to the Courier Journal. "I'm really excited about this, because it's going to be a town hall and we're going to have real questions and real answers. We're going to have a lively conversation and we're going to learn something." The Kentucky Republican is urging his supporters to attend the event with him. The issue is "fairly complicated," Paul said, and he's not sure exactly who will attend. "We'll be asking some Republican senators that are not quite as strong and we'll be questioning some Democrats, but I'm not quite
